

Processed image here: "" How can I compress it? A: Open the image in a picture editor such as Photoshop. Use Photoshop's "levels adjustment" function to make your "dark" side pure black (no lighter than 0) and make the rest of the image pure white. Then use the "levels adjustment" function to make the "dark" side of the image pure white and the "light" side of the image pure black. You should end up with two windows showing a pure black image with a pure white window on top of it. Now the compressed image will be very nice because you will have very little contrast (and also the lossless compression will not give up its quality). Q: How do I break out of a do loop in a bash script? Here is the function:

function refreshData { echo -n "`date` starting refresh of test data..." # do mysql stuff to generate test data echo "`date` done creating test data" echo "`date` going to sleep for 5 seconds" # sleep for 5 seconds }
```

 And here is a script where I call the function:

while : do echo -n "refreshing..." sleep 3 echo "DONE! All good." refreshData done echo -n "press any key to continue..." read key
```

 The issue I'm having is, refreshData will only exit once the do loop has been broken out of by hitting a key, but echo "DONE!" takes less than 5 seconds, and refreshData takes even longer. I want the function to exit just as soon as I hit any key, and I don't want the refreshData function to exit if the script keeps running. How can I get this to happen? EDIT I figured out the problem and fixed it. Here are the changes I made:

refreshData() { echo -n "`date` starting refresh of test data..." # do mysql stuff to generate test data echo "`date` done creating test data"
```
